Supplemental Box

(To be used when the space in any of the preceding boxes is not sufficient)

Continuation of: IV. 3.

The inventions set forth in claims 1-28 and 34-44 are groups of inventions related to a cell handling device having a simple structure, capable of satisfactorily storing cells while preventing the cells from becoming contaminated, and capable of easily injecting the cells into the living body by performing a treatment for releasing the cells from a container in a cell transplantation method, and a human tissue regeneration method using said device.

Meanwhile, the inventions set forth in claims 29-33 are a group of inventions related to a scaffold for breeding- and differentiation-inducing cells to greatly simplify the cell culturing operation.

Since both of these groups of inventions are considered to relate to different subject matter, these groups of inventions are not considered to be a group of inventions so linked as to form a single general inventive concept.

Document 4: JP 63-49070 A (Shimadzu Corp.), 1 March 1988

- 1. The inventions set forth in claims 1, 2, 4, 6, and 29-33 lack novelty and do not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1-3 cited in the international search report.
- (1) The inventions set forth in claims 1, 2, 4 and 6

 Documents 1 and 2 disclose cell-handling devices capable of storing a cell-containing substance in a liquid form in a liquid-tight manner, wherein a gas-permeable region (formed using a gas-permeable resin) is provided at a part in contact with the cells and the capacity for storing the cells can be altered.

Therefore, the inventions set forth in claims 1, 2, 4, and 6 are essentially the same as the inventions disclosed in documents 1 and 2.

(2) The inventions set forth in claims 29-33

Document 3 discloses a microporous cell scaffold containing a vasicular material having a substance that promotes cell adherence and indicates that the diameter of the scaffold particles is between $20\text{--}300\,\mu\text{m}$.

Therefore, the inventions set forth in claims 29-33 are essentially the same as that set forth in document 3.

The inventions set forth in claims 3 and 34-36 do not 2. involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1-3 cited in the international search report.

In general, a person skilled in the art is capable of determining the (gas permeable) state of the gas exchange site suitably so that cells can be cultured/ maintained appropriately in a device such as a cellhandling apparatus.

Consequently, it would be easy for a person skilled in the art to suitably determine the gas permeability in the inventions disclosed in documents 1-3 in such a manner that the cells are cultured/maintained. Even if specific numerical delimitations were given with regards to gas permeability, there appears to be no objective effect that would be considered unexpected arising from such delimitations. This being the case, it would not be difficult to apply specific delimitations.

3. The inventions set forth in claims 7-18, 20-28 and 37-43 are not disclosed in documents 1-4 cited in the international search report and are therefore, novel and involve an inventive step.

(To be used when the space in any of the preceding boxes is not sufficient)

Continuation of: III. 1.

The inventions set forth in claims 5, 19 and 44 pertain to "a human tissue regeneration method...transporting stored cells into a living body" and as such, are considered to be equivalent to treatment (method) of the human body by therapy.
